Picture a slate sliding off a three-storey terrace in Cathays and landing on a neighbour's car. Or a sudden downpour hitting a half-stripped roof in Roath, soaking the ceiling below. Accidents like these are rare with a careful team, but they do happen, and when they do, the question that matters is who pays. That's why Redland Roofing Cardiff, the family-owned business run by John Owen from Rumney, is fully insured for residential roofing installation, repair and replacement. Roofing is heavy, high-up work. Tiles, slates, lead, timber and scaffolding are all being moved around above your home, and often above a pavement, a shared lane or a neighbour's garden. On the tight terraced streets around City Road and Albany Road, houses sit shoulder to shoulder, so a problem on one roof can easily spill onto the next. Proper insurance means that if something goes wrong, there's cover in place to put it right, instead of an argument on your doorstep. With an uninsured trader, you could end up footing the bill yourself or chasing someone who has stopped answering the phone. The risks aren't only about damage. A full re-roof might involve scaffolding, stripping back to the rafters, laying a new breathable membrane and treated battens, and fitting new fascias and gutters. A flat roof replacement means lifting old felt and decking before new tongue-and-groove sterling board and flat roof specialists Cardiff an EPDM membrane go down. Chimney removal on a Splott or Adamsdown terrace means dismantling brickwork at height. These are serious jobs. Before you let anyone start, it's sensible to ask any roofer to confirm they're insured for the work they're quoting. Good roofers in Cardiff won't mind the question at all.
