For an MKE ride from a hotel or office, name the property, the entrance and the person the chauffeur is meeting. Commercial buildings have more doors and rules than most homes. Before travel day, put the confirmed pickup time, address, flight details and contact number in one short summary. Share that summary with everyone in the party so each person sees the same plan.

Milwaukee Fly Limo provides airport transportation to and from Milwaukee Mitchell International Airport with a late-model luxury SUV fleet. Its chauffeurs are professional, courteous, experienced and safe. A precise pickup description lets the team plan the start of the ride as carefully as the drive to the airport.

Identify the traveler

In a busy hotel lobby, the chauffeur needs to know who they are meeting. Provide the traveler's name and a mobile number, and say whether they will wait inside or step out when the vehicle arrives.

If several guests from the same event or company are travelling, list who is in each ride. Clear names prevent mix-ups when more than one group is waiting at the same entrance. If guests are sharing a ride, say who is responsible for gathering the others before the pickup time.

Mention access rules

Some office buildings require visitors to check in at a security desk, and some hotel driveways have strict loading rules. If you know of any restrictions, include them so the chauffeur can plan the pickup without delay.

For early or late pickups, check whether the entrance you plan to use is open at that hour. Lobbies and side doors sometimes close overnight, which can change the best place to meet. A quick call to the front desk the day before usually settles the question.

Name the property and the entrance

Give the full name of the hotel or building along with its street address. Many properties have a main entrance, a side door and a garage exit, so say which one the traveler will use and where they plan to wait.

If the property has a covered driveway or a designated pickup area, mention it. Local knowledge from the traveler or the front desk is often the quickest way to choose a meeting point that works for everyone.

Plan the timing from the door

Allow time for checkout, collecting bags and walking to the entrance when you choose the pickup time. A traveler still settling https://maps.google.com/?cid=16333691474950489993 a hotel bill or finishing a meeting is not yet ready to leave for Milwaukee Mitchell.

Confirm the plan with the traveler the evening before. A quick check that they know the pickup time, the entrance and the contact number makes the departure calm rather than rushed. It also gives the traveler a chance to mention a late change, such as a different checkout time or an extra bag.
