Who Is Liable in a Tractor-Trailer Crash?

Unlike many car crashes, a semi-truck crash often involves several potentially responsible parties. The driver, the trucking company, the trailer owner, the shipper that loaded the freight and the maker of a failed part may all play a role. Working out who is legally responsible is an early task for a truck accident attorney, because each party may carry its own insurance.

Claims against the driver

Most claims start with the driver's conduct, such as speeding, following too closely, unsafe lane changes, distraction, impairment or fatigue. Commercial drivers need a commercial driver's license (CDL) under 49 CFR Part 383 and follow the driving rules in 49 CFR Part 392, which include limits on texting and hand-held phone use. A safety violation does not prove fault by itself, but in many states it can be evidence of negligence, and some states apply negligence per se. A truck accident attorney will compare the driver's conduct with these rules.

Why the trucking company is usually a defendant

If the driver is an employee working within the scope of the job, the trucking company is generally answerable for the driver's negligence under vicarious liability, sometimes called respondeat superior. The company can also face direct claims for its own conduct, including negligent hiring, negligent retention, negligent supervision and negligent entrustment. The Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations require a driver qualification file under 49 CFR Part 391, drug and alcohol testing under 49 CFR Part 382, and systematic inspection, repair and maintenance under 49 CFR Part 396. Missing or incomplete records can support a direct claim against the company, and for a truck accident lawyer the driver qualification file is often one of the first documents requested.

Owner-operators and leased trucks

Many owner-operators lease their trucks to a trucking company. The leasing rules in 49 CFR Part 376 require the lease to give the trucking company exclusive possession, control and use of the equipment during the lease, which can matter if the company says the driver was an independent contractor. The USDOT number and name marked on the cab, the bill of lading and the lease itself help show which company was operating the truck. A truck accident attorney typically requests these documents early.

Cargo loaders and freight brokers

Cargo that shifts or falls can contribute to rollovers and jackknife crashes. The cargo securement rules in 49 CFR Part 393 set standards for tiedowns and load securement, and a shipper or loading company that controlled how the freight was loaded may share responsibility in some cases. Claims against a freight broker that arranged the shipment raise separate questions, including federal tractor trailer collision lawyers preemption, and the answer depends on the claim and the facts.

Defective parts and repair work

When brakes, tires, steering components or an underride guard fail because of a defect, the manufacturer can face a product liability claim. A maintenance contractor that performed faulty repairs can also be named. Separating a defect from poor maintenance usually means inspecting the parts before they are repaired or scrapped.

Insurance and shared fault

Federal financial responsibility rules in 49 CFR Part 387 require at least $750,000 in public liability coverage truck accident lawyers when for-hire interstate trucks with a gross vehicle weight rating of 10,001 pounds or more haul nonhazardous property, and certain hazardous materials require higher minimums. Most states apply comparative negligence, which can reduce damages by the injured person's share of fault, while a few still follow contributory negligence. A commercial truck accident attorney looks at all of the parties, since a single policy may not cover the full loss. This is general information rather than legal advice, and it does not predict the result of any claim.