Choosing who repairs your phone is a matter of trust, because you are handing over a device that holds your photos, messages, banking apps and a good deal of your daily routine. Reviews are the easiest way to judge a repair shop before you walk in, but only if you know how to read them. Free Fusion in Corby is rated 4.7 phone screen repair out of 5 on Trustpilot from almost 500 reviews, which is a useful starting point for anyone searching for trusted screen repair.

A rating on its own tells you very little, so look at what sits behind it. The number of reviews matters, since a high score from a handful of people can be a fluke while a score built over hundreds of reviews is much harder to fake. Check how recent the comments are and whether they describe different kinds of jobs, such as screens, batteries and charging ports, rather than the same few lines repeated. Look too at how a business deals with the occasional unhappy customer, because that says more about attitude than a wall of praise.

Reviews should sit alongside things you can check for yourself. A repair shop should be willing to explain what is wrong in plain language, give a price before work starts and tell you what is covered if something goes wrong afterwards. We offer free diagnosis for local customers, quote from-prices for common jobs, such as iPhone screens from £24.99, and back our repairs with a warranty. More than a decade of repair experience means we have seen most faults before, from ghost touch and flickering to cracked glass and liquid damage. Be wary of any shop that promises perfect results every time or makes bold claims it cannot back up. Repair work is practical and honest, and the most reassuring shops tell you plainly what they can and cannot do for your device.

It is also worth visiting in person. A shop on the High Street in Corby's Old Village is easy to judge, because you can see the counter, ask questions and hear how staff talk about your problem. Most smartphone screen and battery replacements are done in about an hour, so there is no long wait to find out whether the service lives up to the rating. If you are further afield, postal repair is available by Royal Mail or DPD. It also helps that we repair such a wide mix of devices, including iPhones, iPads, Apple Watches, MacBooks and Android handsets from Samsung to Honor, so our reputation rests on many kinds of work and not on one single repair.

Judge us on what you find. Call Free Fusion on 01536 260 558 or come in to 62a High St, Corby, and ask us anything you like about your device.
