The Mechanics of Rarity: How Cases Become Rare

To comprehend rare CS: GO cases, one need to first understand how Valve handles its video game economy. Unlike video games that continuously keep all microtransactions readily available, Valve makes use of a system called the Rare Drop Pool.

When a case is released, it usually drops often to active gamers. Nevertheless, as new operations and collections are presented, older cases are turned out of the active drop swimming pool. Once a case goes into the unusual drop swimming pool, its drop rate drops to a fraction of a percent per game.

Eventually, some cases stop dropping completely. Because gamers should take in a case (along with a £ 2.50 key) to open it, the total circulating supply of these stopped cases decreases each and every single day. Basic economic principles take over: as supply diminishes and demand stays steady or boosts, rates escalate.

1. The Knife Generation: Cases released in 2013 function the "first generation" of knife finishes (Karambit, M9 Bayonet, Bayonet, Flip Knife, and Gut Knife). These remain the most desirable knife models in the entire franchise.
2. Included Covert Skins: If a case consists of a legendary skin-- such as the AK-47 Fire Serpent or the M4A1-S Hot Rod-- need for the case remains high because players want to attempt their luck at crafting or unboxing those specific surfaces.
3. Total Supply: Cases that were limited throughout early, smaller player bases naturally have far lower supply numbers than cases released during the 2019-- 2022 boom.
