Primary Care Visits, Preparation, and Preventive Care FAQs

How can pre-visit planning make my appointment with a primary care doctor more productive?

Pre-visit planning is a team-based approach in which the practice prepares for appointments in advance, and the American Medical Association notes it saves time, reduces practice costs, and improves patient care. Information gathered beforehand includes your goals for the visit, questionnaires based on the visit type and diagnoses, medication, allergy, and immunization updates, yearly consents and billing information, demographic updates, and any pre-visit tests such as bloodwork for chronic disease monitoring.

Preparing these details before you arrive helps the visit focus on your concerns.

What should I expect the Medicare yearly wellness visit to cover, and how is it different from a routine physical?

According to Medicare, the yearly wellness visit is a conversation-based visit to develop or update a personalized prevention plan, not a routine physical exam. Your provider takes routine measurements such as height, weight, and blood pressure, gives health advice, reviews your medical and family history and current prescriptions, offers to discuss advance directives, and gives you a written checklist of needed screenings and vaccines. You pay nothing if your provider accepts assignment, and the Part B deductible does not apply.

Could I owe money after a Medicare wellness visit if extra services are added?

Yes. Medicare states that you may owe coinsurance, and the Part B deductible may apply, if your provider performs additional tests or services during the same visit that Medicare does not cover under the preventive benefit. CMS separately notes that a routine physical exam, performed without relation to a specific illness or complaint, is paid 100% out of pocket. It can help to ask in advance what is included and what may be billed separately before the appointment.

How often does Medicare cover the wellness visit, and what does it help me create?

CMS lists the wellness visit as covered once every 12 months. Its purpose is to develop or update a personalized prevention plan and perform a health risk assessment. In practice, Medicare says the visit produces a written plan, such as a checklist, telling you which screenings, vaccines, and other preventive services you need based on your current health and risk factors. That written plan can serve as a reference between visits.

What kinds of tests might a primary care practice arrange before my visit?

The American Medical Association notes that pre-visit tests in primary care include bloodwork for chronic disease monitoring and routine health maintenance items such as mammograms, colonoscopies, and vaccinations. Labs for chronic disease management may be needed before each visit, while health maintenance items are only necessary for one appointment per year. Asking whether any tests should be completed in advance can help your provider use appointment time for discussion rather than ordering.
